GARRETT WATKINS

Designer

Garrett Watkins is a recent graduate from the University of Oregon. He received his Bachelor Degree in Architecture with a minor in Environmental Studies. His interests in Landscape Architecture revolve around the understanding of place and how designers can create meaningful solutions for people and their surroundings to engage with one another. While at Oregon, Garrett's work was mainly focused on the interaction between the built environment and systems of landscapes. After graduation he began an internship for the National Park Service as an Ecological Restoration Worker in the Yosemite Wilderness . His interests outside of architecture involve backpacking, rock climbing, skiing, and biking.
